Introducing The Scots Ancestry Research Society

The Scots Ancestry Research Society is a non-profit-making organisation. It was established by the late Rt. Hon. Thomas Johnston, C.H., in the spring of 1945 when he was Secretary of State for Scotland, to assist persons of Scottish blood to trace facts about their ancestors in Scotland. During the years of its existence the Society has investigated more than 50,000 enquiries from people of Scottish descent both at home and overseas.

The Society receives no financial assistance from public funds or from any foundation and is entirely dependent on the payments made to it by clients. That income has to cover not only the cost of searching the records and the fees paid for access to them, but also correspondence, the preparation of reports, and substantial overheads in the shape of rent, rates, heating, lighting, office equipment, stationery and postages. The Society is not in a position to undertake any work free of charge.

In order to save work for the Society and expense for themselves, enquirers should note that it is to their advantage to furnish as full and precise information as possible about names, dates and places of birth and/or residence. Although most of the relevant records are centralised in Edinburgh, their structure is for the most part based on parish, district or county units, and even if a client has the name and date of the ancestor with whom he wishes a search to begin, it may not be possible to proceed without information about location. Enquirers are sometimes misled by assumptions that such and such a name inevitably points to ancestry in a particular part of the country or that bearers of a particular surname are necessarily related to other bearers of it: such assumptions are seldom helpful.

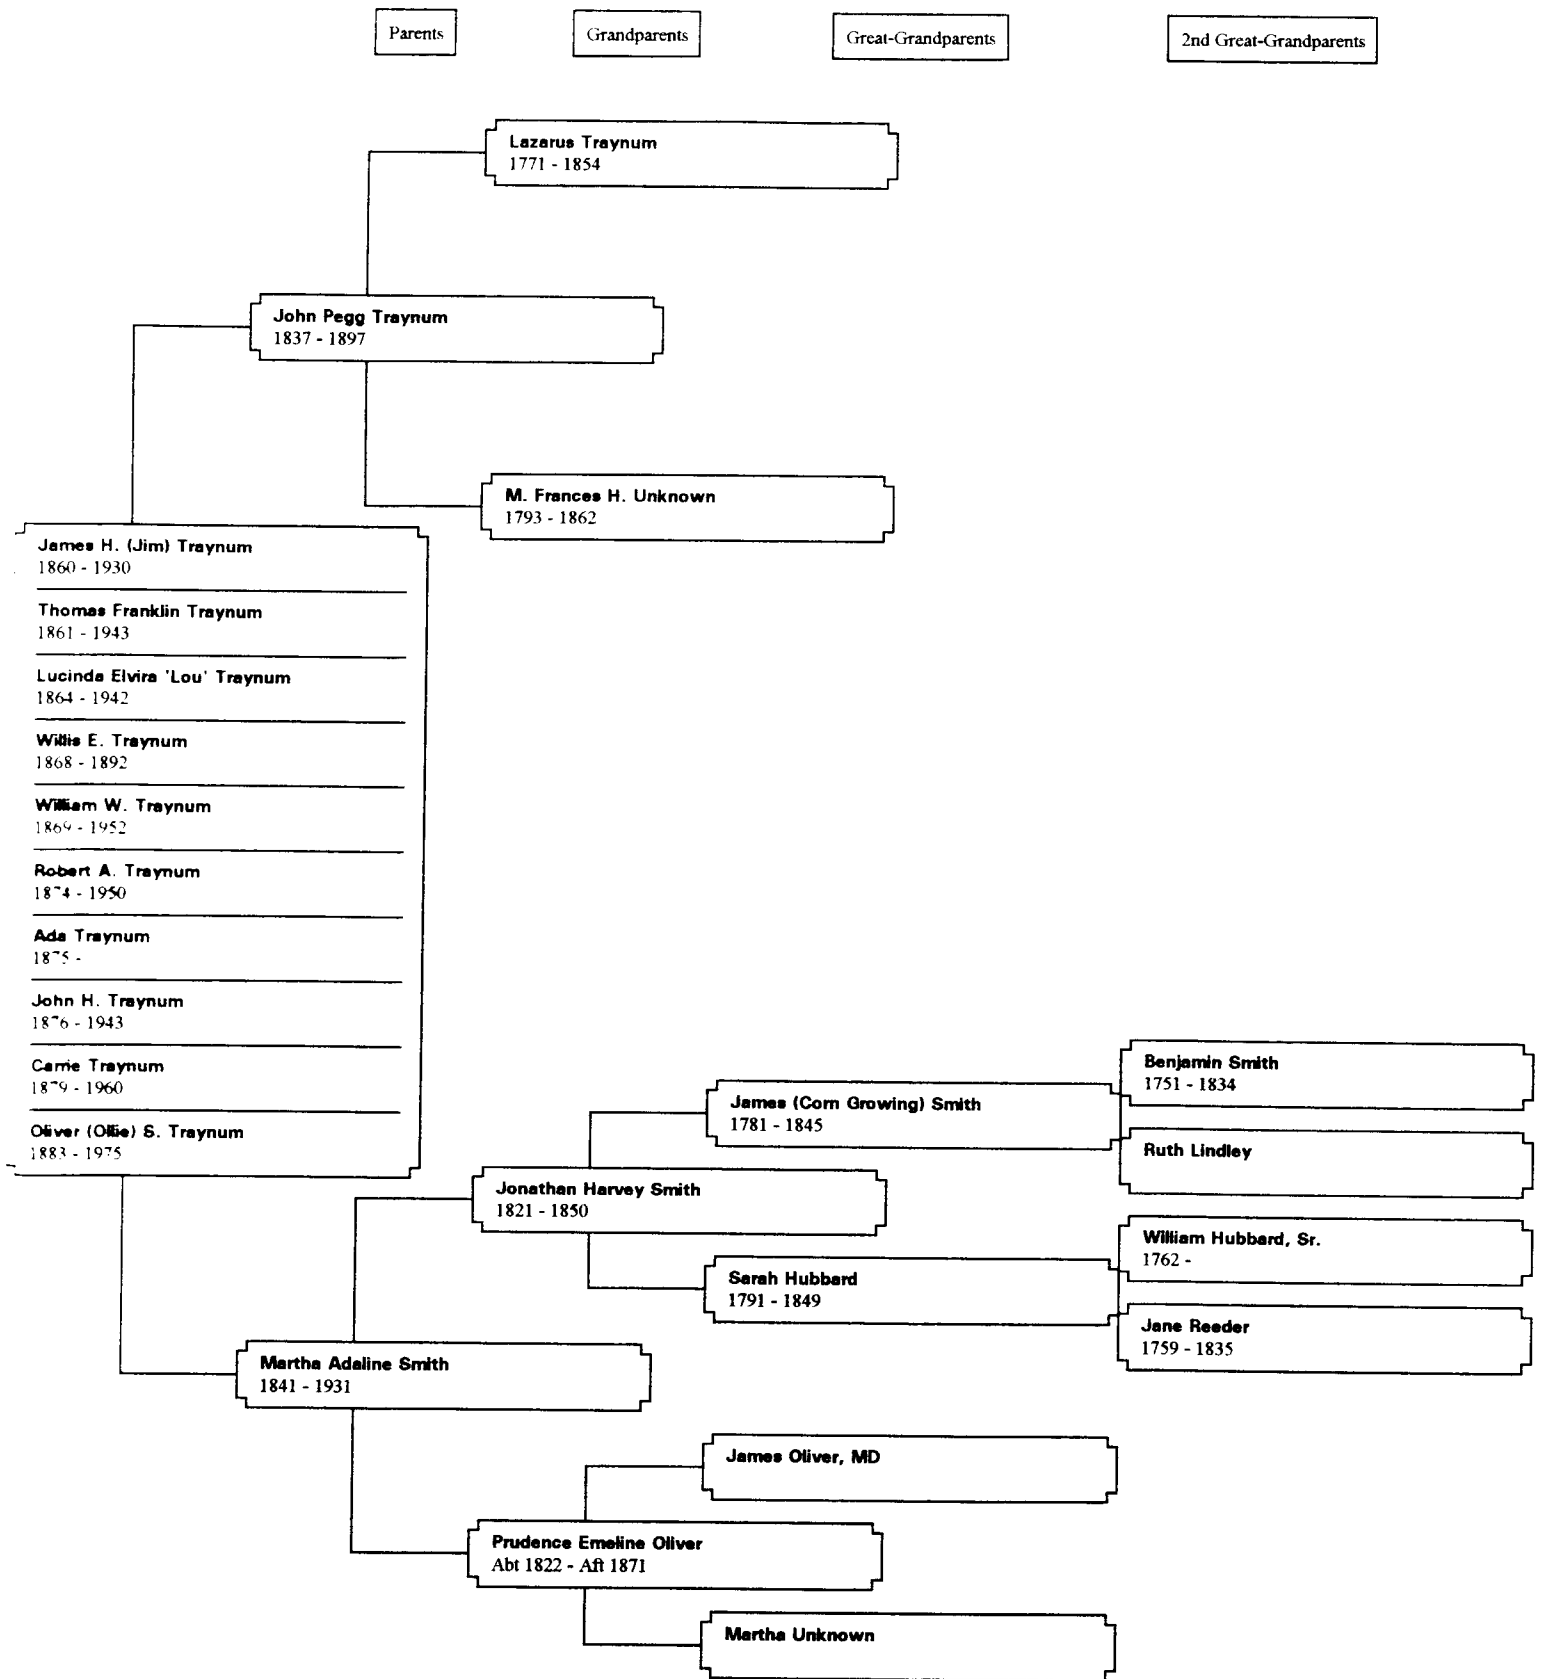

Even when clients can furnish adequate information, difficulties may arise because of deficiencies in the records. The statutory registration of births, marriages and deaths did not begin until 1855, and before that such comparable records as exist have various imperfections. It must therefore be evident that even extensive searching may sometimes produce only meagre results. On the other hand, some records go back for several centuries and much can often be discovered about ancestors in the seventeenth century or even earlier. On average a reasonable expectation is that a search can carry one's knowledge back about two hundred years.

If specific information regarding place of birth in Scotland is not known, descendants of Scottish emigrants may find it useful to consult the immigration record and/or death certificate of their immigrant ancestor, census returns, tombstone or family Bible. Any such particulars, by identifying an individual or individuals, may provide the Society with the necessary starting-point.

The Application Form requires clients to authorise expenditure up to a specified sum. Should such expenditure yield satisfactory results and it seems likely that the investigation may profitably be extended farther back in time, it is always open to clients to authorise additional expenditure.

Enquirers who are uncertain about procedure and about prospects of success, or who would like a measure of guidance as to how they can make some investigations for themselves, often find it useful to begin by having a consultation with a member of the Society's staff. They may for example learn of printed books from which they can carry an investigation some way before finding it necessary to embark on research in the records. Such consultations can usually take place only by appointment, and they are conducted on the basis of a minimum charge of £3 (for the first quarter of an hour) and £2 for each additional quarter of an hour.

History Center design complete

Search for builder is on

Architects with Helmut, Obata and Kassebaum's Greenville office have completed the exterior and interior designs for the new S.C. History Center.

"We have ourselves a beautifully-designed building," said

Richard Runnels, deputy director for administration.

"Our next challenge is to find the right contractor to build it."

Archives officials anticipate collecting bids in mid-May and awarding the contract to the best-qualified contractor by June 1.

Runnels said construction could begin immediately following the awarding of the contract.

"We are right on schedule with the new building," Runnels said.

Plans call for the department to occupy the building in mid-1998. ■

CORNELIUS KEITH: Robert Hicks, Sr. of Prince George Co., MD who settled later in that part of Surry County, VA which was added to Brunswick Co., VA in 1732, patented 580 acres on the north side of the Roanoke River adj. the land patented by Robert Munford and John Anderson. Robert Hicks gave 100 acres of this tract to Cornelius KEITH in 1734 for seating and cultivating a part of the land. He gave the remaining 480 acres in 1735 to Samuel Clark, Jr for true love and natural affection. This tract of land on the north side of the Roanoke River was opposite the tract of land patented by John ALEXANDER in 1727.

Between these tracts of land was the famous "Horseford" Captain Hicks, noted as an Indian Trader, undoubtedly had selected this tract of land on one of his many trading trips to trade with the Southern Indians. The Trading Path into the Carolinas crossed the Roanoke River at this point. Near this point, Cornelius KEITH was granted a license in 1739 to keep a ferry over the Roanoke River from his own landing below the Horseford to Alexander's landing. Cornelius KEITH apparently discontinued the operation of the ferry, however, for in 1741 Martha ALEXANDER, widow of John ALEXANDER, petitioned the Brunswick Court for a license to keep the ferry from her landing over the River to Cornelius KEITH'S landing, which was granted. Cornelius KEITH sold his land in 1742 to Thomas Twitty.

Cornelius KEITH was undoubtedly a first generation immigrant for in a deposition 3 May 1739, in the Brunswick County Court, he stated that he has resided 30 years in this Colony since his importation. He had apparently come to Virginia as an immigrant in 1709.
