PENDLETON ISBEL--Pickens Co SC Probate Court Box 1 No. 7
South Carolina Pickens District Dated 25 May 1829--The condition that is the said Pendleton Isbel adminstrator of Pendleton Isbel Sr. farmer, dec'd to make a true and perfect inventory of all the goods credits etc. of said deceased. Sg: Pendleton Isbel Jr. Wit: Francis Burt, Silas Kirksey.

to this State [it's unclear if he means North or South Carolina] when I was quite young. My father was old and infirm, and my mother was bedridden. I have had to take care of them and of several sisters, one of whom was a cripple and could not move without the aid of crutches, since I was a child. I am now twenty-three years of age and will be twenty-four on the 24th of next October--if I live. The revenue officers want to capture me for the sake of the rewards which have been offered for me--it is easier for them to make their money in that way than by working for it.

"My father owned a still all his life, as did all the farmers about here, before the revenue laws were passed; and I worked it for him. We were very poor and he could do very little. I worked on the farm all day and at the still at night to make a living for us. I have often worked all day ploughing and then run the still all night until breakfast. I would be so tired the next day that I have gone to sleep in the corn row between the plough-handles and wake up only when my horse stopped at the end of the furrow. This kind of life was too hard for me and soon broke me down, so that I got to working one night at the still and sleeping the next. I worked on the farm every day at the same time. They (the revenue officers) pressed me so close after awhile that I quit distilling and went to hauling whiskey and selling it in North Carolina. They found out that I was doing this and a warrant was issued for my arrest.

"The first trouble I had with the revenue officers was all on my side, as they captured and destroyed for me one hundred and twenty-three gallons of whiskey. I had paid one dollar per bushel for the corn that made it, besides eighteen dollars to a man who ran the still. The officers cut up and emptied three barrels of the whiskey, and kept two barrels for their own drinking. They kept these two barrels hid in the woods and would come back and get it by the jug full whenever their supply gave out. Among those who got some of it were Chisohm and a fellow named Hampden. Several people have told me that they drank some of my whiskey that was captured at that time. An old man told me the other day that when they came for the last of it they arrested him and took him off and all the officers stopped on the side of the road and filled their jugs with the whiskey which they told him was Redmond's. They carried off twenty-three gallons at this load.

"The next morning, it was Sunday, the officers rushed into my house and presented their guns at my father and captured him. He was seventy-eight years of age and my mother, who was confined to her bed with palsy, was nearly as old. Father begged them not to alarm her, she was badly frightened, and he would surrender. They asked for me, but I was at the spring when they came up and saw them and so escaped. Father told them I was not far off but I kept out of the way and they took him down to the church near by. They captured several other men in the church and the preacher stopped in the midst of his sermon and sat down. My father and several others gave bail, the rest they took away with them. My mother was badly frightened by it all and died in a few days afterwards. My father had to go to Asheville. The journey and exposure made him ill and he died a few weeks later.

"Both of them died before I could get back to them. I was then keeping out of the way as the revenue officers were watching for me every time I went to see either of them. I did not see my mother buried but when my father died too and my sister were left alone in the house, I determined to go home and attend his funeral and see after them at any risk. On the road from the house to the grave when we were following his body to burial we met a revenue officer. He looked at me very hard, but he was alone and seeing that I had some of my friends with me, he passed on and arrested several of the neighbors who had dug the grave and were resting on the roadside.

"After the funeral I still kept out of the way and as my sisters were alone and helpless. I had to dodge in and out and try to take care of them as best I could. This was the beginning of my troubles."

Exactly when these early events took place is not explicitly stated, but was most likely in 1875. Neither is where. In October 1925 Mr J Lewis Bell of Brevard, NC answered an inquiry about Redmond from Mrs Caldwell, editor of the "One Minute Page" column of the CHARLOTTE OBSERVER. In the letter by Mr Bell he states that "Redmond was reared on the east fork of the Frend Broad river about ten miles from Brevard."

Mr C McKinley's interview with Redmond in June 1878 took place somewhere north of Pickens. "a late night's ride into the mountains." From his discription of the journey to meet Redmond a good guess would be near Rocky Bottom, which makes it difficult to determine which state they were in at the time of the interview.

CIRCUMSTANCE OF DUCKWORTH'S DEATH

Redmond's next run-in with the revenue officers was in the Fall of 1876 in Transylvania County North Carolina.

Redmond's words. "When Deputy Marshal Lee was discharged from the revenue service he had in his possession a warrant against me, which he turned over to Frank Case. This warrant Alfred Duckworth, who had been recently appointed on the revenue force, tried to get from Case, who refused to let him have it. Duckworth then swore he 'would take me, warrant or no warrant, or would kill me in the attempt.' 'He had taken one highflyer,' he said, 'and by God he intented to take another.'

"Duckworth had been almost raised with me from childhood, and we knew each other well. He was very bigoted and was always bragging and doing rash things. He rode one day by his own grandfather's house, where there was a

NOTES

The 1850 census, Gordon Co, GA, shows a Naomi Cobb, age 16, born SC, in household of Lavenia Cobb, and poss indicates that she was "Married within the Year". In the same house is Charlotte Cobb, age one, born GA. ---Charlotte could not have been Lavenia's child as -L- was yet a widow. She could only have been Naomi's child, as -N- was the only other female in the house. This would mean that -N- was a Cobb by marriage only and that her unknown Cobb husband was not present for the census. Quite likely he was Lavenia's son and already dead, or Lavenia would have provided his information to the census taker. At this time, little is known about Wm A and Andrew Ambrose Jr.

The 1850 Mortality Schedule Index lists an Andrew A. Cobb, died in Cass Co, in May 1850.

Lavenia Cobb married Rev George W. Eaton, 1854, Gordon Co, GA, following the death of his first wife, Elenor, in 1853.

Wilson H. and Jefferson S. Cobb both served in 26th AL Infantry Regt, as well as most of their Cobb cousins in Fayette County, during the Civil War. It is believe Wm A Cobb did also. It is known Jefferson S. Cobb survived the war, married, and relocated to Dyer Co, TN, abt 1873, then to Crockett Co some years later. He was living as late as 1913, when he made application for pension based on his service to the Confederacy

COMPUTER AND ON-LINE CLASS by Herman Geschwind

Last month we covered GEDCOM import, or how to add information from a GED file to a new or existing Family Origins Database. This step is simple and rather straightforward.

To export data from a Family Origins Database does have a number of options that need to be considered. When the EXPORT feature is invoked, the first screen has three sets of options:

The topmost panel deals with the type of GED to be created (1) General, (2) Ancestral File and (3) Temple Ready. The default is General which is just right for normal GEDCOM file exchange. The other two formats have to do with special requirements of the LDS Church.

The bottom panel has options to include notes associated with each record, sources, addresses, and to preserve word wrap for attached notes. The defaults are to include notes, include sources, ignore addresses and to preserve word wrapping. Again, the program defaults are right for most purposes. If notes should include some snide remarks about a maiden aunt that the rest of the world should not see, then it pays to uncheck the box marked "Export Notes".

The middle panel has some real interesting options as to which individuals should be exported. The default setting is "Entire Database", which is the easiest to handle. The other option is to "Select Individuals", which is a very powerful feature with which we deal later.

The GEDCOM File to Create menu has some powerful options which are not quite obvious. The normal choice for transmitting a GEDCOM file as an E-mail attachment is to specify a directory and file name on the hard disk, such as C:\AOL\upload\Smith. Family Origins will automatically add the correct file extension to the file name. Now, assuming that you want to mail diskettes with your database. Here the path will be: A:\Smith. The nice thing about the GEDCOM standard is that if the Database to be exported happens to be larger than what one diskette will hold, then the program will fill the first diskette to capacity and then prompt for a second diskette, etc., until the entire selection has been written to diskette. When you specify diskette output, just make sure that the diskettes have been formatted error-free and are properly labeled. Another consideration is that the output to diskette is not compressed, so that when the database contains several thousand records, quite a number of diskettes will be required [to put the 125,000 record OPD Database on diskettes would require 24 disks -ouch].

Quite often the intent is not to export the Entire Database but only specific family lines or individuals. Here is where Family Origins does provide some unique features. Invoke the option "Select People to Export". When this is checked, the Family Origins browse window comes up. Type in the name of the starting person such as SMITH,Joe and then double click on his name. The next choice is to mark either all the descendants or ancestors of the selected person. So, if you want to exchange the entire SMITH family line, find the oldest SMITH in the database and then select "His/Her Descendants". Normally with this option you should also check "Include Spouses of Individuals". Family Origins will ruminate for a while doing the marking and then invoking "OK" will get the file creation started.

The reverse option would be to select a given SMITH and then mark "His/Her Ancestors", again including spouses.

Another feature of Export Selected Individuals which I believe is unique to Family Origins is that with the selection window up, you can click on any individual to have her/him included in the file. Back to our SMITH example. We want to export ALL the Smiths in our Database. Some are the descendants of SMITH,Zachariah but we have a number of others which may be descendants but are as yet unlinked. Here the steps are to select and mark Zachariah and all his descendants. The selection window will show all the SMITHs that have been automatically marked by a little "x" to the left of the name. Now we can go back and manually mark all the others SMITHS by highlighting and double clicking the unmarked names.

The ability to Select Individuals also comes in handy when you receive a GEDCOM that contains several family lines and you want to examine and even merge only specific groups of individuals. Assuming that you received a file that contains Mercks, Evans, Gaines and Smith and you want to work with the Smith line only. Here you can use the Export Selected Individuals to mark only the descendants of a given individual, then create a mini-GEDCOM which can be re-imported into your main database and then merged and linked. A handy and powerful feature which will save a lot of keystrokes and eliminate possible transcription error.

Edward Hardy Elliott enlisted in Co. E, 1st SC Volunteers at Fair Play, SC, on April 14, 1861; one source noted that he received a medical discharge from the Confederate Army, but he was listed in another source as killed at Spotsylvania, Virginia.

A. R. Ellis served in Co. G, 1st SC Rifles (Orr's Regt.); he attended the 44th reunion of Orr's Rifles, which was held at Seneca in 1916.

Gideon Ellis, Jr. (1824-1905) was a son of the Rev. Gideon Ellis (1786-1850) and Lucy Easley Ellis (1786-1855); his wife was Adline McWhorter Ellis (1824-1905).
